The Missus.

GOGDNESS gracious, mercy me! Ain't it simply awful?

Why can't folks have decocy, and be true and lawful?

Spikers, Shontses, Shipples, Reids—isn't it amazing?

Reading of their wreiched deeds sets me fairly blaning.

Rearen hunries! Every one should be scourged with lashes,

And I'd like to see it done, salting all their gashes.

Don't you think the people who think they may be blameless

Must be kind of crary, too, or themselves are shameless?

He.

DON'T know; you see I've not given much attention
Or devoted any thought to the things you mention.

The Missus.

DUT a person needn't think or have information
To despise the ones who sink to such degradation.
There should be a law to take such folks out and strip them And then tie them to a stake and let some one whip them; I could smile to see the blood from their shoulders streaming. And to hear the lash's thud and their wretched screaming! If they knew that's what they'd get, maybe they'd be trying To have decency, and let others cease their sighing.

He.

WELL, you may be right, but why do you seem so spiteful?

Let them go it; you and I still find things delightful.

JOHN, how can you, sitting there, speak as you are speaking?

Den't tip backward your chair—can't you hear it squeaking?

I believe you sympathine with those horrid creatures;

You have something to disguise! You have guilty features!

John, you've been decriving me, I can see it plainly! Why, oh, why, must such things be? I have trusted vainly! Don't you touch me! But you'll pay for your wretched sinning. And I'll hunt her night and day-stop your silly grinning.
